Windows Extract - Lines From Files is an application developed to help you extract lines of text that include the information you are looking for and hence, reduce the time and effort required to process large files. Comes with feature-rich, yet approachable...Virginia State Guard Virginia State Guard was a militia unit of the Confederate States of America that operated during the American Civil War and was tasked with monitoring of Union movements along the border with the Union-occupied U.S. state of Missouri. It also operated under the directives of the State Adjutant General. It was formed from Alabama State Guard in April 1861. The State Guard units were under the command of Major General Stephen Dodson Ramseur (until resigning in February 1862) and, later, Theophilus H. Holmes (until his death in March 1863). Organization On May 20, 1861, the Confederate Congress created a State Militia for the several states of the Confederacy. The first commander of the Guards was Brigadier General Isaiah Sanderson, who was accompanied by Major General John S. Williams. In addition to the initial component of the Guard, units were formed on a state-by-state basis. When the Guards were organized, they numbered less than 150 officers and men. Their purpose was to protect the state's border areas where the population of southerners and Free Staters had intermixed. In Virginia, the Guards were organized in the Department of Acclimation and Resettlement. The President of the Confederate Congress, Jefferson Davis, appointed Brigadier General Stephen Dodson Ramseur as commander of the Virginian Guards. After being promoted to Major General, Stephen Dodson Ramseur took command of the Southern Guards. Brigadier General James Mercer and Colonel Hiram Berry assisted General Ramseur in recruiting his forces. The guard began recruiting in the tri-county area around Danville, Patrick and Bedford. Union General Benjamin Butler captured several members of the Guard's headquarters staff at Parrack's Mill (also known as Camp Pratt). General Ramseur was succeeded by Colonel Theodore D. Holmes, who commanded the Virginia State Guard. The Confederate Congress authorized the Governor of Virginia to raise a battalion of State Guards in April 1861. After the governor failed to raise the battalion, on July 20 the Confederate Congress directed the colonel commanding the State Guard to raise a company of seven men. In September 1862, the guards regiment consisted of:
